Thanks, Randyc. I guess I wasn't seeing the distinction between artificial and natural light as a feature so much as a limitation. I know the ambient sensor works because the light won't come on if it is the middle of the day and the shower curtain is pulled back, but it will come on if it is later in the day, even when all the other lights in the bathroom are already on, which feels brighter ...

Low-key lighting is a style of lighting for photography, film or television. It is a necessary element in creating a chiaroscuro effect. Traditional photographic lighting, three-point lighting uses a key light, a fill light and a back light for illumination. Low-key lighting often uses only a key light, optionally controlled with a fill light or a simple reflector.

A shadow is a dark (real image) area where light from a light source is blocked by an opaque object. It occupies all of the three-dimensional volume behind an object with light in front of it. The cross section of a shadow is a two-dimensional silhouette, or a reverse projection of the object blocking the light.
